The plan now-at least it has been so on the Loire-is to fire at a range from which the bullets reach the enemy senttered over a line. It is the opinion of some experienced officers, however, that a rather shorter range would have a more send all the bullets within some forty feet, making a complete gap to that extent in the line of treops fired at. Probably both plans might be advantageously resorted to, according to circumstances. It is observed that one effect of the long range of the Chassepot is one has just traversed as confidently and as safely as if it were Hyde park may become on such occasions a trap for bullets. Aimed at bjects upon its edge, they fly past them to unknown distances, and the casualties which thus occur form a large proportion of the losses in recent battles. One result of this uncertain flying of Chassepot bullets is that it to look for the wounded until the battle is over. Without meaning mischief to them, the enomy's bullets come whizzing over the plains strewed with dead and dying long after the fary of the combat has rolled to some other quarter, and he wounded are left without the attendance. which they would have received were it possible to approach them with g enter entity. > HOUNDS IN INDIA. (AND CHINA) The following letter which appears in the Times of India will perhaps afford some useful bints to our readers in the North, where the question of introducing bounds and converting the paper bunts into drug hunts has been frequently discussed :-TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MADRAS TIMES."

Sir.-I observe in an article in your paper of 27th instant, that some one has at last taken up the subject of "Hounds in India." The the custom on entering a port at which there question is one of some importance in India. was a contractor was to present a formal dewhere the expense of importing bounds causes many to forego the pleasures of the chase, and I for one would gladly see the matter thoroughly ventilated. I quite agree with you, that crosses that be most advantageously made with the indigenous breed of dogs of the country, but I am not sure that in your article you have dog I know nothing and will not offer an dogs" in India for the last ten years, I would nake a few suggestions regarding the other crosses, viz , that with the country greyhound and polygar. The former no doubt have exa pair of that breed at present, and during the last 18 months have slipped them at all kinds of legitimate game and in all kinds of country, during which time they never failed to kill to a particular division. We should keep exactly anxious to secure the right to fish in British in her efforts the enemy must ultimately be paid for as savings was paid to the messes at jungly stuff running the line of a hare at great the end of the quarter. Witness was not awa: a speed and ended in their turning him out and that if men were absent more than 48 hours killing in the open. I do not however advocate The produce would be "leggy" and possess too greybound would cause them to be continually on the look out for their game, ahead of them, Arab greyhound, by which I presume you mean the "Indian greyhound." The polygar also does not give a good cross, for his enriness is against him, and besides that he is in many cases deficient of real plack, though endowed with a savage energy for a time. In fact his nature is not unlike that of the hunting cheetah, who, if he misses the antelope the first spring, generally sulks. I have watched the character of the polygar while in the Decean closely, and never met one in which there was not a trait of it. You express fear that you will be 'pshawed" at by many people for hand the money either to the commander or to bred class of indigenous dogs of India. I will advocating a cross of fox hound, and the higher the paymester. He also said he had made this brave the ridicule, and go a step lower, and suggest the gross with the parish! I will not however do so witout giving my reasons. When in Central India in 1865 an officer of a regiment then going home made mea present of three couple of pure English bounds from a good kennel and landed only a few works. With this little nack I had some very good sport during the cold weather, but as the hot weather came on they pined and died. I had however previous to this misfortune got three litters of pups all by pariab dogs which were chosen as sires from their size and other attributes necessary to bunting dogs. These pups grew into fine large dogs, many of them . very hundsome, and as good-looking hounds as would be seen on the flags at Badminton or away at racing page on a burning scent as mute as death. Luck favored me, and my cross again of pure English blood with my balf tions which defied bot weather and rains, neither of which are piresent in Bengal! Christmes day of 1867, after having hunted in some soup and wheat cukes-we drew again at 2 p.m. went away with a jackall who was run into at 4-15 p.m. without a check, and this ground gone over was mostly out grain fields with no moisture. Of course Mr. Tennyson, Lord Lytton, and other such superior objects of Mr. Friswell's insolence took no notice of his attacks, and the critics universally condemned his book. Among the persons reviled, however, were two much more sensitive than Mr. Tennyson and Lord Lytton, to wit,

Mr. George Augustus Sala, and the Jew-proprietor of the Daily Telegraph, in which Sala writes, a Mr. Levy. The passages, in which Mr. Friswell reflected on Mr. Sala's nose, and the cause of its alleged reduces, as well as on some episodes of his enreer, seemed to be legally libellous; not so the remarks on Mr. Levy. However, in order to gratify his thirst for vengeance, Mr. Levy eggs on Mr. Sala to bring an action against Mr. Friswell for libel on the said Sala, whom the Jew-gentleman, with a manificence truly Obristian, promises to indemnify in all the costs of the suit. This new combination between proprietor and contribut-or, insulted capital and, outraged labour, is the all-absorbing theme of conversation in the Hohemia of minor London literature.

DOG TRAINS IN BRITISH NORTH

The following is taken from a long account

on the fur trade in British North America published in the New York Herald :-"Next in novelty of conveyance is the dog train, in general use from the nothern territories of the United States to the Arctic Sea. These trains are somewhat different from the Esquimnux trains, the dogs being harnessed in single file, while those of the latter are driven abreast. Four dogs constitute a good team. They are of no particular breed, any species of good sized dogs being used. Most of the train dogs are half wolf, and are as sarly and violens a set of rascals as ever existed. The dog sledge consists of a thick plank, about a foot wide and ten feet long, with the forward end turned up like a state. A dressed skin, resembling parchment in appearance, is attached to this, very much like the upper leather of a laced shoe, and the traveller, placing his ropes inside, gets in, and is wrapped up as tightly sod in about the same manner as his foot would be in an English shoe. The baggage of the traveller is placed at his back, and the driver runs on snow shoes behind. The freight sledges consist of only a plank curved at the end, without any covering. Most of the dog trains have little bells and beautifully beadworked trimmings, and when faily rigged form very elegant turnouts. On the journey the dogs are fed only once a day, that being at night, when each animal is given about two pounds of penningen, equal to four pounds of fresh most. The dogs get no water, but eat snow us a substitute. dogs get no water, but eat enow us a substitute, and sleep at night among the drifts without any bed or covering. Sometimes they are not unbarnessed on a trip, in consequence of their liability to run away or their hecoeness when being harnessed up. The driver carries a small whip composed of a stick about two feet long, with a very neavy rawhide thoug of the same length, and several small pieces of tin attached to the upper end of the stick where the lash is attached. The driver always stops the train, and takes a dog out of harmess before flogging him for misconduct, and when he does punish an animal, it is in the most cruel manner, beating him over the head in all cases. In doing this the pieces of tin make a great jingling, and as the driver runs along behind the sledge he has only to call a shirking dog by name and rattle the tin to arouse the animal very suddenly. A long strip of rawhidedrags upon the ground behind the sledge, with which the driver holds it back whenever descending into a bollow. When the travelling is bad, and the dogs are liable to become disabled by the ice on the thin crust, little moscasins are put upon their feet. Their average rate of speed, with a load of 100 pounds per dog, is forty miles per day; but in an emergency, with good snow, they can make seventy miles. Journeys of many hundred miles are made with such sledges in the depth of winter, and one hardly knows which to admire most, the power and speed of the dogs or the endurance of the driver who runs along behind. Very often at night, when several dog sledges are coupled together, the men alcoping in their robes and blankets on L the mow, some old dog will rise up and let out a prolonged dismal howl. Instantly another joins in, and in a few moments every dog will get up into sitting position, and unite in a chorus of howling, which, if not checked, would soon make a raving maniac of the traveller. No pen can adequately describe it. The dogs are an article of traffic the same as horses, and sell at from five to twenty-five dollars apiece, according to quality, there being as much difference english and chinese dictionary WITH THE PUNTI AND MANDARIN PRONUNCIATION. Anglo-Chinese Dictionary, by the Rev. W. LOBSCHEID, published at the Daily

POR scope and practical service this Work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese linve of Integenrs been compelled to coin to express the numerous objects in machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in extense. Each and every word is fally illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of a most instructive nature Both the Court and Puntispronunciations are given, the accents being carefully marked on the best principle hitherto attained. The type graphy displays the success of an attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond n the size of body, thereby effecting a vast commy of space, zehieving a clearness not previously attained, and dispensing with those vast margins and vacant spaces which have beretofore characterized Chinese publications. The scope of the work is so great, and its utilitarian purposes so complete, that a re ference to its pages quables a person understands English to communicate of with natives who understand nothing but Chiness. In this respect the work will be found indispensable to all Europeans residing in China, and to the natives themselves it explains subjects fully, with which very few in deed of them are perfectly acquainted. To parties resident in England and interested in Uhing it cannot but be invaluable occasionally.

Personal Personages. (Speciator.) Newspapers have an obstacle to contend with in their daily record of history, which work often escapes attention, and that is the difficulty they have both in obtaining and diffusing that clear impression of the minds of the leading persounges in the world which those who may read the history a century hence will probably possess. This knowledge is very often essential to the comprehension even of duily facts, and is go further into the evidence, as the following always essential to the understanding of their general bearing; yot it is sometimes unattainable by publicists, and almost invariably unattainable by their renders. Foreigners very seldom quite understand the governing men even of free countries, men who are incessantly before the public; and of the Personal Personages, as they may be called, the men who are powerful from other reasons than their cloquence or their official nots, it is hard to get and barder to publish the morest outline of truth. Nobody, perhaps, in possession of great power was ever studied with more painful attention than the Emperor Napoleon, and cer- had never seen a witness whose disrogard for respectful reticence. Does anybody even so much as know for certain whether he is an Ultramontane or not? and yet think what issues may depend on that, how that must modify all future Austrian legislation. Bismark is better known, the epigrammatic phrase "A Junker of caning" barriaging not to have anybody even tion claims of relationship only disturbed them. (Laughter). They had an idea that the making of a will accelerated their death—(renewed laughter)—and they were indifferent to others, became "selfish," and the word "give" discomposed them. one is or can be certain about him, and yet he may give the tone to a new epoch. we doubt very greatly whether this ignorance is ever likely to be much dispelled. The power of the individual does not decline—four or five deaths would even now change Europe—but the power of the public to understand an individuality does. Inquisitiveness, no doubt, is greater than ever. Publicity is greater than ever. Analytical ability, if not greater, is more diffused than ever. But the ruling men of the subject men, and the former do not like them, and they have discovered defences which are and they have discovered defences which are nearly impervious etiquette and formalism. No King now fails to make of his palace a Castle of Silence, where nothing done or said produce a reverberation load enough to be heard outside. Even at Windsor the rule is to be blind, deaf, and in the despotic Courts a breach of the rule would be summarily avenged. Even if such tially excepted, all talk alike in public, King were the case, it did not prove that he was William's colloquial telegram being merely a capable of making a will. The making of it concession to the homeliness of German taste, and division of his property did not emanate and no more an evidence of character than from the testator, but from Torlesso, who had Maria Theresa's exclamation in the theatre, "My Fritz has a boy!" was proof that she was not the proudest woman in Europe.
